Kane's practice at Aeton includes the representation of individual and business clients in a range of litigation and trial matters in state and federal courts throughout Connecticut and Massachusetts. He regularly handles matters involving commercial disputes, breach of contract, unfair trade practices, theft of confidential information, technology errors and omissions, employment claims, and products liability defense. Kane also provides general counsel legal services to small and mid-sized businesses related to commercial contracts, technology, privacy, employment, litigation and risk management.

Kane started his legal career as an Assistant District Attorney in Massachusetts where he tried numerous jury and non-jury cases to verdict and questioned hundreds of witnesses under oath in court proceedings. In addition to his experience as a prosecutor, Kane spent seven years practicing at one of Connecticut's largest litigation firms where he was named a Partner. His experience included the handling of cases involving catastrophic injury, wrongful death, business disputes, and commercial litigation.

Kane has earned national recognition as a leader in law firm technology, practice management, and alternative fee billing. He was a leader in the initial move by forward thinking Connecticut lawyers to adopt digital technology and paperless files. He is a frequent author and commentator on issues concerning technology and the law and is highly knowledgeable in such areas as cloud computing, lean law firm design, technology errors, privacy and data loss, and cyber liability. Kane is the author of the widely-read Connecticut Business Litigation Blog (ctbusinesslitigation.com) which covers commentary and updates on important litigation and current legal issues involving Connecticut business.
